Other vaccines that may be required or recommended, include routine flu vaccination, meningitis and hepatitis A and B. Depending upon the country, it may also be wise to be vaccinated against such diseases as typhoid. To stay healthy while traveling abroad, you will also need to be up-to-date on childhood vaccinations such as polio, varicella (chickenpox), measles/mumps/rubella (MMR) and tetanus/diphtheria/pertussis (Tdap), as these illnesses are still thriving in some parts of the world, including the United States.

Traveling abroad increases your risk of exposure to vaccine-preventable diseases that are still common in other parts of the world. If you are among the increasing number of people traveling to remote destinations or developing countries, your risk of exposure to exotic diseases is even higher.

The number of people traveling to remote destinations or developing countries is rising. As an increasing number of travelers are visiting parts of the world where malaria is widespread, we will provide anti-malarial medication, education and recommendations on avoiding insect-borne illnesses. To prevent gastrointestinal disorders from ruining your trip, we offer education and advice on avoiding food-borne illnesses and may recommend anti-diarrhea medication.

When you visit our Travel Clinic, our nurses will review your travel itinerary and health history and make recommendations for vaccines or other medications based on the destination. They will also counsel you on how to stay healthy and what to do if you get sick.

Let us provide you with a little peace of mind. A visit to our Travel Clinic can help to minimize the health risks you will encounter during your trip, whether you are traveling alone or touring with a group, for business or for pleasure.

Our staff will review your itinerary, length of stay, and current travel conditions advisories for your destination. We will assess the potential health risks, the need for special vaccines, immunizations or medications, and the general medical and safety concerns for your specific itinerary. We offer up-to-date information on the immunizations and medications recommended for the part of the world you’ll be visiting, including alerts issued by government agencies such as the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the World Health Organization.

We offer routine as well as travel-related vaccinations, but your specific itinerary will determine the ones that you might require. As an official Yellow Fever Vaccine Center, we can administer the vaccine and provide required travel documentation for Yellow Fever vaccine and Meningitis, if needed.

Trip planning is a major concern when traveling abroad. Your passport to health is a trip planning tool that will provide you with a list of vaccines you may need, along with information on how to obtain them and/or confirm that they will be available where you will be traveling. Our travel counselors are trained to handle international travel-related questions and can answer any questions you might have regarding travel preparations.

While most adults have no problems with receiving multiple vaccines at once, a doctor may advise against it for certain circumstances. In addition, some vaccines are best given at specific times, such as before you travel. A doctor will be able to advise you on which vaccines are best for you and when to receive them.
